there have been hundreds of anti-government demonstrations in various cities of Iran. The Iranian government's response: increased repression.

In August, the United Nations expressed concern at the suppression of protesters and women, and at the increase in the Iranian regime's terrorism. The resolution notes the executions of more than 150 political prisoners in May 1992, and expressed grave concern "at the rise in the number of summary executions following the recent anti-government demonstrations in cities such as Arak, Mashad, and Shiraz, and at the arbitrary arrests of thousands of people during those demonstrations, attributed by the authorities to the Mujahadeen."

B. Support for International Terrorism: Exporting terrorism internationally has become another hallmark of this brutal regime. In an unprecedented admission on August 30, the Iranian regime's Minister of Intelligence acknowledged his government's responsibility for terrorist operations against political dissidents and foreign nationals abroad. According to the U.S. State Department's latest report on terrorism, "Iran continues to be a leading state sponsor of terrorism... Iranian intelligence services continue to facilitate and conduct terrorist attacks, particularly against regime opponents living abroad. This policy is undertaken with the approval of the highest levels of the regime."

Resolutions by the U.N. Human Rights Subcommittee and the European Parliament deplored the continuing increase in terrorist activities against dissidents abroad, including the foiled plot in December 1991 to assassinate Mr. Masoud Rajavi, President of the National Council of Resistance of Iran. On April 5, 1992, the National government, alarmed at the spread of popular protests, crossed international borders in violation of international law to bombard an opposition base in another bid to kill the opposition's leaders.
