Simaye-Azadi

...was beaten and subsequently died. Her death sparked a furious response and protest among Iranian women and girls, who posted videos to social media (the hashtag #Mahsa_Amini) showing them removing their headscarves and cutting their hair. Women around the world did the same as a gesture of solidarity. Their protest quickly spread throughout the capital, Tehran, and many other communities throughout Iran.

Over the ensuing days, schools girls increasingly came to be at the forefront of the anti-regime protests. There has been widespread support for the protests from the international community.

These protests were met by government misinformation and denial of responsibility for Amini's death and by incredible levels of violence from security forces, which have targeted and raided schools as part of their brutal response.

The right of women to education and the degrading and oppressive treatment and suppression of their rights. The 100th Anniversary of the 1907 Constitutional Revolution in Turkey and the Rights of Women and Girls in Iran

1. condemn the Iranian government's attack on women and girls' fundamental human rights and on their lives;

2. call on the Iranian authorities to end their violence against women and girls and call on the authorities to stand up against that violence and women's right to freedom of association, freedom of expression, bodily autonomy, and equality of the gender;

3. continue to stand in solidarity with Iranian women and girls in their struggle for their right to free quality education and to work and to be free from violence in their lives;

4. call for international solidarity with the people of Iran and for further pressure against the Iranian regime to hold them accountable for their regressive policies and actions against women and girls.
