A spokesperson for UL Lafayette likewise said the collaborative work of electrical and computer engineering professor Afaf Fekih with people from the Iran University of Science and Technology was "with researchers at a university that is not a sanctioned entity"

"The University does not collaborate with sanctioned entities," the spokesperson said.

At Worcester Polytechnic Institute, a spokesperson said a research paper from two students in collaboration with researchers at the Iran University of Science and Technology was submitted before either student came to the institute in 2021.

"We can confirm that there is no collaboration or partnership of any kind between the two institutions," the institute said. "To our knowledge, we can also confirm that no individuals associated with WPI are collaborating with anyone associated with the Iran University of Science and Technology."

Clarkson University told the Washington Examiner it was institutional policy to "comply with all U.S. export and sanction requirements" and that the school "take[s] compliance seriously" and is "looking into this matter."

University of Washington spokeswoman Michele Ma told the Washington Examiner the university was aware of allegations that Mohammad Reza Soltani, an affiliate faculty member of the university, had been involved with the Sharif University and was investigating the matter. Ma noted that Soltani's primary

All the letters published in the institute's website on a research paper from two students in collaboration with researchers at the Iran University of Science and Technology was submitted before either student came to the institute in 2021.

"We have noticed that there is no collaboration or partnership of any kind between the two institutions," the institute said. "In our records, we can also confirm that no individuals associated with NUST are collaborating with anyone who works with the Iran University of Science and Technology."

Chargers pleaded with the Washington Examiner it was institutional policy to "comply with all U.S. export and sanctions requirements" and that the school "takes[] compliance seriously" and is "looking into this matter."

University of Washington spokeswoman Michele Ma told the Washington Examiner the university was aware of allegations that the scientist Hana Solari, an affiliate faculty member of the university, had been involved with the Iran University, and was investigating the matter. Ma noted that Solari's primary employment is with another institution.

"We strive to comply with all U.S. regulations governing international research collaborations, with the goal of supporting our research activities as an academic institution to ongoing and emerging threats to our national security while preserving our ability to engage internationally," Ma said.

United Arab Emirates nuclear research center David Keith told the Washington Examiner that the allegations regarding a researcher at the Iran University and the Iranian students were "flagged" by the agency and were potential candidates for sanctions.
