Last week, Iran transferred four dual U.S.-Iranian nationals wrongly incarcerated in Tehran's Evin Prison to house arrest. The transfer is reportedly the first step in a sequence that will ultimately secure the freedom of five U.S. citizens. In exchange, Iran will be able to tap into nearly $6 billion of its existing frozen assets for carefully monitored expenditures on food and medicine.

Not surprisingly, the reaction from critics who tend to see the Islamic Republic as Satan's finger on earth has been predictable. U.S. Sen. Tom Cotton called the deal "ransom" and "a craven act of appeasement." Sen. Jim Risch opined that it would provide "a windfall for regime aggression."

Perhaps. But let's not forget that five Americans will be freed, some of whom have been unjustly imprisoned for years, and that Iran won't have direct access to its funds, which will be strictly monitored for humanitarian purchases only. To critics of the arrangement, of course, there's no getting around the fact that money is fungible and will free up funds that Iran can use for nefarious purposes. If they had their druthers, the only U.S. interaction with the Iranian regime would be to apply more pressure.

And there may be more not to like. Separate from the hostage release, U.S. officials have been

There Are No Good Deals With Iran

But the Biden administration's search for a deal with Tehran are still the best options available.

It has been 10 years since the 2015 nuclear deal was signed. It is time to ask whether it was a good deal.

Last week, Iran transferred Iran's nuclear enrichment technology to the United States. The Biden administration's search for a deal with Tehran are still the best options available.

But the Biden administration's search for a deal with Tehran are still the best options available.

Perhaps, but let's not forget that the American nuclear deal, signed in 2015, was a major achievement for years, and that Iran has not been able to use its funds, which will be strictly monitored for humanitarian purposes only. The price of the deal was not getting around the fact that money is tight and will be used for Iranian purposes. If they had their doubts, the only U.S. interaction with the Iranian regime would be to apply more pressure.

And there may be more work to do. Despite the fact the Iranian regime, U.S. officials have been working to establish a set of informal, unbinding, and unenforceable guidelines with Iran designed to deter future tensions, especially on issues such as nuclear enrichment, and perhaps at some point to discuss a more formal agreement like the JCPOA deal, initially known as the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA).

But here's the bottom line: There are no good deals with Iran, only bad and worse ones. For a U.S. administration with a pile of headlines — from Ukraine and Russia to China — and a presidential re-election campaign to run, trying to prevent a serious crisis over Iran's nuclear program is the smart and responsible play. The last thing the Biden administration needs is a Middle East crisis over an uncontrolled Iranian nuclear program that's escalating at an ever-worsening rate.

Anyone who witnessed the tortuous process of negotiating with Iran over the nuclear issue knows there are no state-level deals to be had with Iran, only tactical ones. That's why the Biden administration's search for a deal with Tehran are still the best options available.

Last week, Iran transferred

...the Biden administration's approach to negotiations with Iran over the past few years. The approach is essentially the same as the approach taken by the Obama administration, which was to engage Iran on a series of issues that were seen as less contentious than the core issues of Iran's nuclear program. This approach was based on the idea that the Biden administration would be able to secure a deal with Iran that would be more favorable to the United States than the deal reached by the Obama administration. However, the Biden administration's approach has been criticized for being too cautious and for not addressing the core issues of Iran's nuclear program. This approach has also been criticized for being too focused on the issue of Iran's nuclear program, while ignoring other important issues such as human rights and regional stability.
