prominent jurists & politicians demand Iran's leaders be held accountable for 1988 massacre

During an international conference on August 21, former UN judges, renowned legal experts, and government politicians from the US, Europe, and Africa called on the international community to hold the Iranian regime's leaders accountable for a massacre of political prisoners 35 years ago.

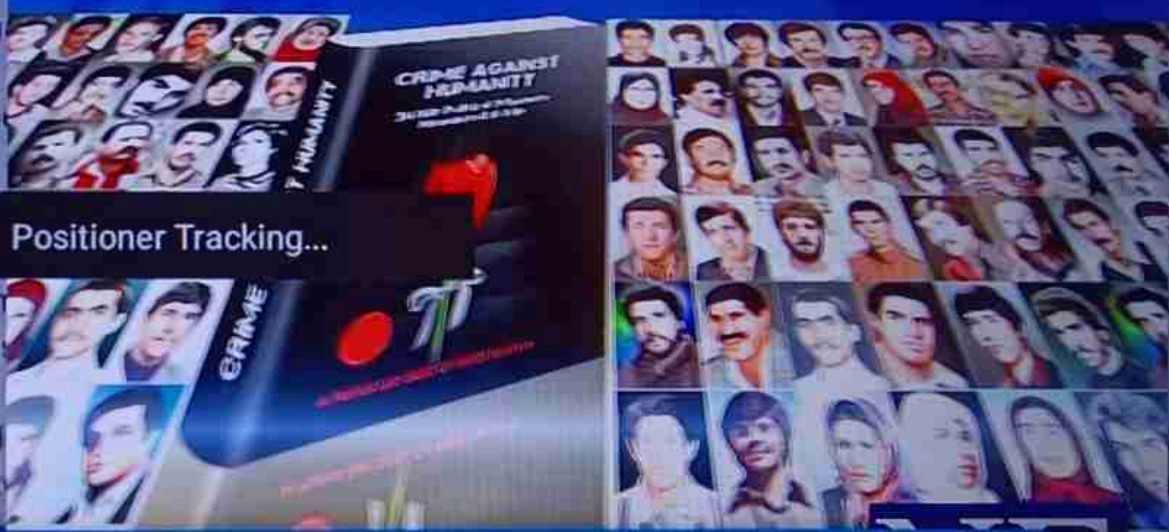

The conference's participants stressed that mechanisms exist for the international community to end the impunity that Tehran has enjoyed over the years and to bring the masterminds and perpetrators of the 1988 massacre to justice.

The conference promoted the view that the massacre fits the definition of a crime against humanity and may also constitute genocide. Panelists also called attention to modern-day threats to the inalienable rights of Iranian dissidents and urged the adoption of policies that safeguard those rights, particularly for members of the principal Iranian opposition movement, the People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran, or MEK, residing in Albania at the self-built community known as Ashraf 3.

During an international conference on August 31, former US judges, renowned legal experts, and government politicians from the US, Europe, and Africa called on the international community to hold the Iranian regime's leaders accountable for a massacre of political prisoners 35 years ago.

The conference's participants stressed that accountability is vital to the international community, to end the impunity that Tehran has enjoyed over the years and to bring the mass murders and assassinations of the 1988 massacre to justice.

The conference stressed the view that the massacres are the definition of a crime against humanity and may also constitute genocide. Participants also called attention to modern-day threats to the fundamental rights of human dissidents and urged the admission of political detainees and refugees of their rights, particularly for members of the principal human rights organization, the Falah's Mujahedin Organization of Iran, or MOI, residing in Atlanta at the self-built community known as Ashraf 3.
