...at Tehran's University of Science and Culture. Cities across Iran have
 ...protests since 22-year-old Iranian woman Mahsa Amini died on September 16

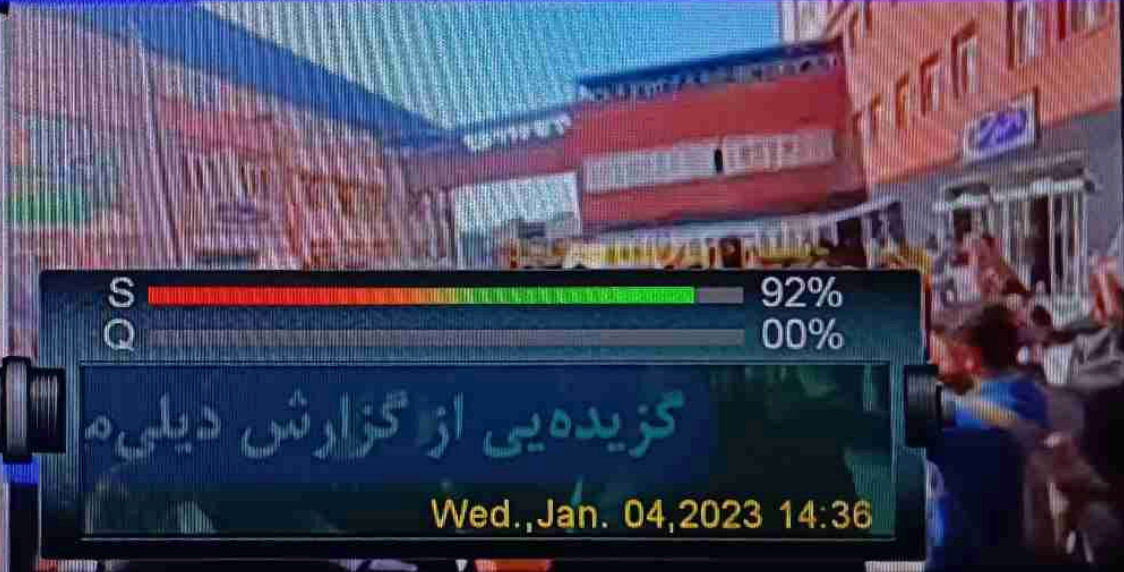

Aida, a 23-year-old medical student at Tehran's medical university, is in her second semester, has seen many of her friends and fellow students arrested.

She was beaten during a recent protest. The Iranian paramilitary guards would injure the students with batons and sometimes live fire, while behind them a set of vehicles waited, Aida said.

At first glance, the vehicles appeared to be ambulances, but on closer inspection she noticed they didn't have any licence plates.

Any injured students that allowed themselves to be carried into the 'ambulances' by regime officials were never heard from again, she said.

'Students are at the forefront of this great revolution as they were during the time of the Shah,' said Aida.

The Revolutionary Guards are expected to be officially designated a terrorist group after 20,000 to 30,000 of its members are to be arrested in the UK last year. The Telegraph can reveal...

Tom Tugendhat, the security minister, and his predecessor, the Home Secretary, both support the move, which is expected to be announced within weeks.

Officials have been building the case against the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC), with the security services making use of intelligence shared by the US.

Prosecuting the group instead would be a signal of a move to bring the IRGC, around its meetings, carry out its activities, and the IRGC's support of its activities.

It would put the body on a similar level to that of Al-Qaeda, which perpetrated the 9/11 attacks, and the Islamic State group, showing how grave the threat is being treated inside Whitehall.

Similar steps have been taken by the US and Canada, two of the UK's partners in the Five Eyes intelligence alliance, which also includes Australia and New Zealand.
