Iran: International community must not be deceived by dubious claims of disbanding 'morality police'

Morayef, Amnesty International's Regional Director for the Middle East and North Africa

The international community and global media must not allow themselves to be deceived by Iranian officials' claims that the country's 'morality police' have been disbanded. Amnesty International has received reports that the 'morality police' continue to exist and are still enforcing strict laws against women in public spaces, including schools, government offices and public transport.

Iran's 'morality police' is a sub-branch of the country's police force, which is under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Interior. Despite the Prosecutor General's statement that the 'morality police' have been disbanded, Amnesty International has received reports that the 'morality police' continue to exist and are still enforcing strict laws against women in public spaces, including schools, government offices and public transport.

Iran: International community must not be deceived by dubious claims of disbanding 'morality police'

"It is important to remember that protesters in Iran are not calling just for the dismantling of the 'morality police' but for the transition of Iran to a new political and legal system that would respect their basic human rights and freedoms. The popular uprising taking place across Iran reflects nationwide rage over decades of oppression against the people of Iran, many of whom continue to be unlawfully killed on a daily basis simply for wanting freedom, democracy and human rights," said Heba Morayef.

Iran's "morality police" is a sub-branch of the country's police force, which falls under the mandate of the Ministry of Interior. Despite the Prosecutor General's statement attempting to distance the judiciary from the "morality police", under Iran's Code of Criminal Procedure, police officials are considered "judicial officials" (zabetan-e qaza) who may carry out arrests and interrogations under the supervision and instruction of the Prosecutor.

The "morality police" place the entire female population under surveillance, but the policing of women's bodies is not confined to the state. Iran's discriminatory and degrading forced veiling laws enable not only state actors, but also private actors, to harass and assault women and girls on a daily basis in

The "morality police" in Iran are not confined to the streets of Tehran but are a public presence in every town and village. They are a sub-branch of the country's police force, which has been under the control of the Ministry of Interior. Despite the Prosecutor General's statement attempting to disband the "morality police", under Iran's Code of Criminal Procedure, police officers are authorized to carry out arrests and interrogations under the supervision and coordination of the Prosecutor.

The "morality police" place the entire female population under surveillance. The arbitrary and discriminatory nature of their actions is well-documented in the state's press, including discriminatory and degrading laws and regulations.

concession that would have been considered major at the time of its outbreak. But this concession is in reality no longer major, due to a crackdown as indiscriminate as it is impotent that has meanwhile occurred.

Time will tell if the very ambiguous announcement of the abolition

For more than three months, a ruthless crackdown has been the official reaction to the people's rising anger, illustrated by several hundred deaths and thousands of arrests. The findings published in Le Monde have told of the level of violence in Iranian detention centers. The reaction to this regression has been weak. It has not been able to put an end to a groundswell of violence, driven by the extraordinary courage of the Iranian people. On the contrary, it has widened the gap of mistrust between the people and the regime.
