(b) Ensure that women and girls who seek abortions and the medical practitioners who assist them are not subject to criminal penalties, especially the death penalty, and lift barriers such as those related to restrictions on contraception;

(c) Facilitate access for women, men, girls and boys to evidence-based information and education about sexual and reproductive health and to a wide range of affordable contraceptive methods.

Right to life

23. The Committee is deeply concerned by ongoing violations of the right to life: the high number of executions, including the considerable increase in that number since 2021; the large number of offences that carry death sentences but that do not qualify as "most serious" crimes, as defined in the Committee's general comment No. 36 (2018), including hudud crimes (such as offences against the State and religion) qisas offences (including unintentional killing) and ta'zir crimes (such as drug-related offences); and the disproportionate application of the death penalty to members of minorities, such as the Balochi, Ahwazi Arab and Kurdish minorities. The Committee is also seriously concerned by reports of executions - more than a dozen in 2022 - for crimes involving charges of moharebeh ("enmity against God") and fejad fil-ard ("spreading corruption on earth"). The Committee is further concerned that, despite the 2017 amendment to the law on combating drugs, the number of executions for drug-related offences increased during the reporting period. The Committee notes that the State party gives "differential" treatment to minors who commit murder; however, the Committee is concerned that juveniles continue to be executed, including three in 2022. It is also concerned by the absence of fair trial guarantees in death
